

Here are some photos from August 4th to 7th.

Primary and Secondary students playing Kahli's viola. Kahli patiently taught them to hold the instrument and bow. Kahli played for them, too.

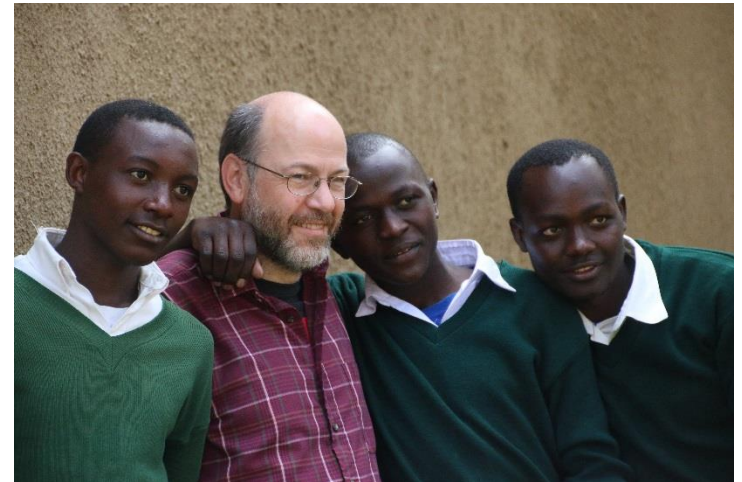

Music brought out the serious side and the laughing side of those playing and those standing by. The rest of us were in tears.

"Nzuri sana!" Words from Mr. Masha, Academic Master, as he watched the children from the primary school play the viola. (Translation: Very Good.) But his facial expression seemed to show the depth of emotion he and we were experiencing watching the next generation of Tanzanians and Americans share this moment of wonder and connection.

Kahli's dad, Robert, also had a "photo" connection with the young men of Ngateu.

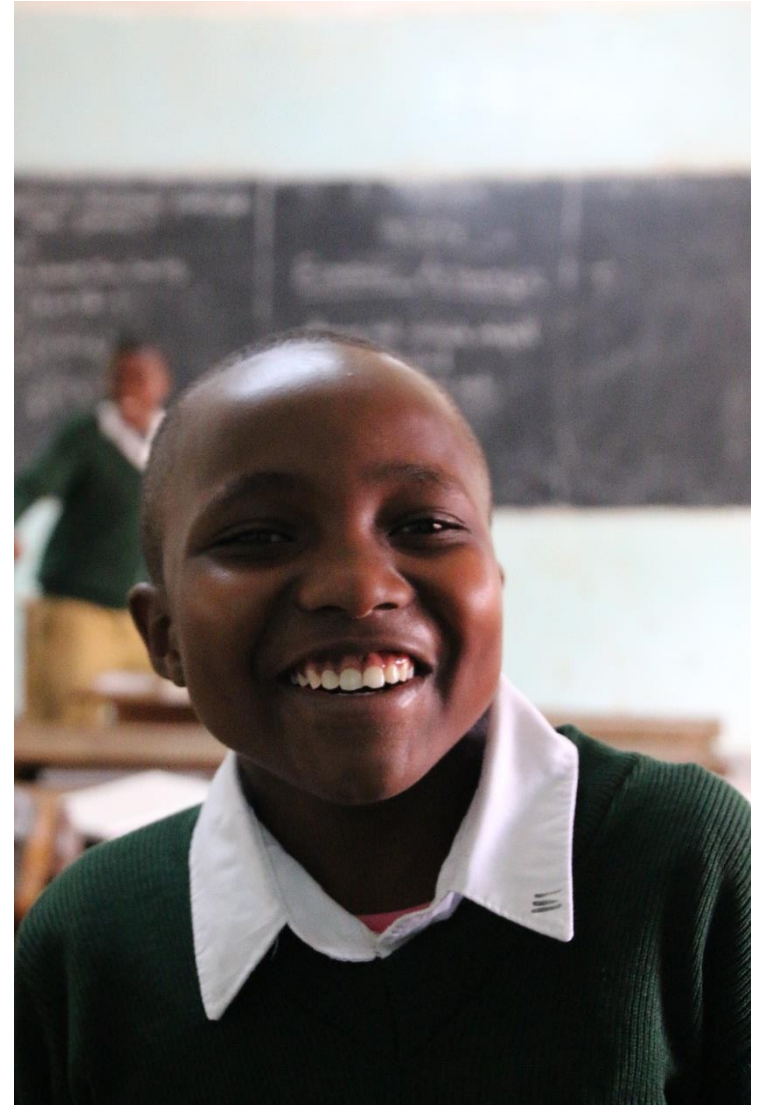

Form 2 students at Ngateu. They had just posed for pictures to be sent to their sponsors. They all were very serious as they posed for these photos. It wasn't until they walked away that they broke into a wide smile or laughter.

Here is a collection of smiles from Ngateu.

Lauren, Lisha, Mya and Sarah handed out socks. Oh my, they were bright and colorful!
